Breathable Quality Air in Your Spray Booth

With the changes coming into effect with the new Health & Safety Reform Bill this year the need couldn't be greater for ensuring that every one spraying catalysed products is protected from the direct physical exposure of atomised paint product.

Everyone is aware that air fed respirators must be worn when spraying these products but not many people are aware of what is required to supply clean, filtered air to the masks.

“ We can help you with this... ”

If you have ever drained a compressor you will be well aware of the filthy water and oil that is a by-product of the compressor and of which a fair amount can end up in the spray/breathing lines. This is a health hazard.

In brief - air supplied from a compressor, in order for it to be clean & safe for the painter to breathe, must go through 3 final stages of filtration.

- Stage 1. The air passes through a water trap which will filter water & solid particles down to 5 microns. (Note: a water trap does not stop oil)
- Stage 2. Then through a coalescent or oil removing filter which will remove oil and remaining solids down to 0.01 microns.
- Stage 3. Activated carbon filter, either located on the main filter unit or the painters air-fed belt removes the last contaminate, dry fume.

The Spray Booth Air-hose

Often overlooked is the importance of the air-hose which goes from the filter unit to the painter's belt. This air-hose must also be of breathable quality. A standard rubber airline will over time degrade split & crumble on the inside and the flow of air will push that residue towards the painters mask. The hose that must be used and which is manufactured to breathable standards will have marked on it "meets AS/NZS 1716", it is normally yellow in colour.

Maintenance Schedule for filter cleaning or element replacement.

Most shops may put the correct filtration in place but then forget about ever servicing the filters. It would be prudent for a shop to have a maintenance schedule for their filtration units so that they would be able to show any inspection body (e.g. worksafe) that ongoing maintenance is carried out at the recommended service intervals.

How often should the servicing be done? At least at the manufactures recommended intervals, or sooner. How long the filters last will largely depend on the quality of the air being delivered by the compressor.

Festo 3 Stage Air Service Unit
This quality air purification unit consists of a water trap, coalescent filter, active carbon filter, and a regulator and gauge.
